Mr. Hutchinson:

“So far as I know there are no State or Federal Regulations ~~now~~ in force dealing with the subject of "High Power Transmission Lines in the United States", I have searched pretty thoroughly in the library and have asked at the New York Public Library (Astor Branch) and the Public Service Commission Offices, but nothing is known at either places ~~of~~ any such act.

I have written to the Library of Congress and also to the Law Library at Albany, and will send you the replies as soon as I receive them.”

Yours truly,

L. E. Howard

My dear Mr. Stott:

Your letter of the 5th instant making inquiry regarding State or Federal Laws or Regulations dealing with "High Power Transmission Lines", was referred to our librarian in accordance with your request. I am to-day in receipt of the following report from the librarian:-

"So far as I know there are no State or Federal Regulations in force dealing with the subject of "High Power Transmission Lines in the United States". I have searched pretty thoroughly in the library and have asked at the New York Public Library, (Astor Branch) and the Public Service Commission offices, but nothing is known at either place of any such act.

I have written to the Library of Congress and also to the Law Library at Albany, and will send you the replies as soon as I receive them".

If the replies which the librarian receives from the Library of Congress, and the Law Library at Albany contain any information of value, I will forward it to you promptly.

Regretting that I am unable to give you any more information on the subject, I am

Very truly yours,

Assistant Secretary.

My dear Mr. Stott:

Referring to your inquiry some days ago, I am sending you herewith a copy of a letter received by our librarian, Miss L. E. Howard, from the New York State Library at Albany, together with copies of two (2) lists which accompanied the letter. The first of these lists which is dated May 18th, and headed "Electric Power", contains definite references to State Laws. Copies of these laws are not in the Institute library, but they will probably be found in legislative or law libraries.

The second list, dated May 14, and headed "Control of Electric Power Transmission," contains references of a large number of articles and various publications which may be of some use to your correspondent.

Very truly yours,

Assistant Secretary.

Dear Mr. Hutchinson:-

Many thanks for the trouble you have taken in looking up the subject of laws regarding high tension transmission.

I appreciate the efforts which have been made by you through Miss Howard very much.

Yours very truly,
